

"Brave Hearts could be the best book ever written about what cops do."

— Gary Delagnes
San Francisco P.D.

"It was only when I was deep into it that I realized they were preying on immigrants. They were giving them $25 to get an x-ray for these phony insurance claims and some were getting five and six a day. It was bad and I'm proud that we put an end to it. There's a thrill to taking out bad guys out that's hard to explain to someone who's never been a cop."

Chapter 3, Brave Hearts

From the pages...

Rich told the priest he wanted to compose a prayer. "I explained that usually I had no trouble making my own prayers, but this time I needed some help." The priest recalled the front-page news reports about the shooting and seemed eager to do what he could. Rich said that first he wanted to thank God for letting him live. Then he asked for a prayer for his fellow officers who were still in the hospital recovering from their wounds. Finally he said he needed a prayer for Arthur Alalouf, the man he killed. He wanted to ask God to let his soul rest in peace. The priest asked Rich to kneel. He stood above him and put one hand on his bowed head and he prayed."
